

They should all Walk Home

13th December 2009

Right now, over 15,000 green hypocrites, mostly funded by the world's suffering tax payers, have winged their way in comfortable carbon-fuelled air travel to Copenhagen's best VIP accommodation. There they will be seeking ways to forcibly reduce our carbon footprint while inflating theirs.

Top rated airlines are booming as prominent people top up their frequent flyer carbon credits. Concierges are smiling as limousines glide in, full of exalted envoys with their entourage of minders and courtiers. Lights are blazing, air conditioners humming, kitchens cooking, champagne bubbling and caviar disappearing.

The Global Warming Industry will also be there, creating scares, drowning polar bears, melting ice, generating publicity, demanding handouts, seeking exemptions, defending paper credits, and pushing for subsidies and special deals.

And of course we will have battalions of largely gullible and fawning media, many also from government media monoliths touring on the tab of the tax payers.

We are told that Australian tax payers have sent 114 official delegates there, all concerned to reduce our consumption of carbon fuels.

If they are fair dinkum, they should all lead by example, use Green Energy, and walk home.
